April to June 2025

From the Editorial Desk

This April - June, 2025 quarter quarter has been transformative for ASWB, marked by empowering initiatives aimed at fostering independence and growth among students.

April, World Autism Awareness Month. To commemorate this important month, ASWB organized a series of insightful workshops tailored for parents, offering valuable guidance and support.

A major milestone was the inauguration of our consultation room, beautifully decorated by the ITC Ladies—a warm and welcoming space for meaningful conversations and care.

During this quarter Swami Vivekananda University, who is a MoU partner with ASWB invited two individuals with autism who have started their own entrepreneurship. The first speaker, Ms. Barsha Deb, trainee at the Aarohan Unit of ASWB used a PPT that showcased her artwork, homemade chocolates, bamboo pencil stands with her artwork that she sells (with the support of her parents). The second speaker, Mr Aditya Ganguly, who recently graduated from the Govt. Art College and an avid participant of YAAR at ASWB takes up painting assignments. He also sells his artwork in different exhibitions.

From the Editorial Desk

Our Annual Concert took center stage on 15th May, 2025 showcasing the dedication and remarkable talents of our students. Their performances lit up the evening, leaving lasting memories for everyone present. The passion and enthusiasm they brought to the event was truly inspiring. Just like previous years, our summer camps were full of excitement and enriching experiences. You may view the ASWB Annual Concert, 2025 in our YouTube Channel. A notable addition this year was the start of the Independent Living Skills Program—designed specifically for individuals with autism, empowering them with practical life skills. This initiative proved to be deeply impactful and well-received.

Additional programs continued to provide diverse learning opportunities, making the April - June, 2025 quarter one of growth, celebration and connection.

Disability is increasingly recognized as a natural part of the human experience, not a deviation from it, and should be viewed as a matter of diversity rather than a problem to be fixed.

Detailed Thinking – learners

- Strengths of Detailed Thinking in Learning
Strong Memory for Facts & Patterns - memorizing facts, dates, and specific details in subjects like math, science, and history. But will have trouble remembering whys and hows
- Accuracy & Precision - Detailed thinkers notice mistakes, inconsistencies, and patterns that others might overlook.
- Deep Focus on Special Interests - Many autistic students have intense interests in specific topics, leading to advanced knowledge in those areas. Therefore things of his/her interest may takeover at the cost of what is difficult or to the learner boring.

Life skills for people with autism

JHINUK MAZUMDAR

Calcutta: A centre for autism has started training individuals with autism on home management and community-based skills.

Each chore, such as peeling a cucumber, making a bed or knowing how to use a washroom, make them more confident, help them to be independent and lead a life of dignity.

Being unable to do chores on their own develops a sense of anxiousness in them.

Several organisations urge parents to train their children with autism. But, often at home, parents or caregivers complete the task for their children to save time.

The result: The individuals become more and more dependent on their parents or caregivers.

"This is about learning to do the chores at home without any help. It will be followed up with more interaction with the community like visiting banks, clinics and hospitals," said Indrani Basu of Autism Society West Bengal.

The centre started the training programme during its summer vacation.

Basu said that the learning would help them finish a task by themselves instead of seeking help from others.

Individuals with autism learn basic chores at the training

For example, some individuals can take a bath but they don't know how to dry themselves. "That has to be taught," she said.

If they are hungry, they should know how to make a sandwich or instant noodles.

"Knowing how to use the washroom would reduce the chances of abuse as well. Being too much dependent on caregivers makes them more vulnerable," said Basu.

"Being able to take care of themselves reduces their anxiety because they know to attend to their needs without waiting for someone to help them," said Basu.

Depending on others for minor and daily chores can be a trigger for aggression, said Basu.

The training is being done in a separate house and not the centre. The house is a reflection of a home environment.

"The learning thus is not clinical or rushed but in an environment that they are used to," a teacher said.

The classes are being held in two batches — from 10am to 1.30pm and from 2pm to 4pm. Individuals who are not part of the centre can also attend the classes.

The individuals are being taught to shave, wash their faces, hands, how to pat themselves dry, make a cup of tea, put pillow covers and other activities.

"Individuals with autism have varying degrees of abilities and therefore, the time taken by one individual to learn a chore will vary from that of another," said Rajkumar Bera, special educator.

"When they can do their chores, it helps the parents, too. It also gives parents some time to spare for themselves, which is very essential," said Bera.

The Independent Living Skills Unit newly opened by Autism Society West Bengal This Unit has started operating from last Monday. News about this new unit got featured in leading newspaper, The Telegraph, on 2nd June, 2025.

Abstract

Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD) services in India are predominantly urban-centric, leaving rural and suburban populations unreached. This paper examines the outreach initiatives by the Autism Society West Bengal (ASWB) in rural and suburban areas of mainly district 24 Parganas, (South), highlighting the challenges faced and the insights gained. This article highlights the unexpected absence of autism services in peri-urban zones near Kolkata, such as Nayabad, Garia, Kamalgazi, and Mahamayatala. Drawing from recent studies and field data, it underscores the necessity of community-based interventions to bridge the service gap. This paper underscores the importance of inclusive, decentralized models. It advocates for culturally sensitive, locally embedded approaches to ensure that children and adults with autism are not excluded from essential services and community life.

Keywords: Outreach, social inclusion, ASD, community-based intervention services, ASWB.

1. Introduction

Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD) affects an estimated 1–1.5% of children in India, yet structured support systems are largely limited to urban centres [1]. Autism support services in India have largely remained concentrated in urban centres, leaving significant gaps in awareness, diagnosis, and intervention in rural and suburban regions. In West Bengal, this urban-rural divide is particularly pronounced, where children and adults with autism living outside metropolitan areas often remain undiagnosed or unsupported due to a lack of resources, trained professionals, and community understanding. In West Bengal, the majority of available ASD services are situated in central Kolkata, bypassing both remote rural communities and the rapidly urbanizing peripheries of the city. The lack of services in such

Abstract

The World Autism Awareness Day, 2025 observance, on 2nd April, 2025, under the United Nations theme "Advancing Neurodiversity and the UN Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs)", highlights the intersection between neurodiversity and global sustainability efforts, showcasing how inclusive policies and practices can drive positive change for autistic individuals worldwide and contribute to the achievement of the SDGs. Neurodiversity is a concept that acknowledges and values neurological differences as natural variations of human cognition rather than deficits. The concept of neurodiversity emerged in the late 1990s as a sociopolitical movement advocating for the acceptance of neurological differences as part of natural human diversity rather than as disorders that require fixing. The neurodiversity concept challenges the traditional medical model of disability and promotes the social model, emphasizing inclusion and acceptance of individuals with conditions such as autism, ADHD, dyslexia, and other neurodevelopmental differences.
